

April 23 Parent Discussion

Learning Styles:

- Discovering ways to teach so your child can learn
- Recognizing the amazing strengths of those who think differently than “the norm”
- Exploring left- and right-brained learning, integrating the hemispheres, and understanding why many engineers can't spell

Drop in from 7:00-9:00p on Tues night, April 23, to share and pick up ideas with fellow homeschoolers and educators. Newcomers always welcome. We'll break the evening into sections, giving time for networking and questions.

DISCUSSION LEADER: CHRISTINE OSWALD, MA

Christine has been enamored with the human soul and its care since she was a small child. This impelled her to study psychology, literature, and Human Needs and Global Resources as an undergraduate at Wheaton College. She has taught students with special needs and/or nontraditional learning styles (in both public and private venues) and has tutored in literature and ESOL. She married Rich Oswald in 1998 and they have four daughters whom they homeschool. She completed her master's degree in Marriage and Family Therapy at Richmond Graduate University in 2008, earning the Aultman Education Award for Academic Excellence. Christine will be teaching Multicultural American Literature and Composition at LAC this coming fall.
